

In the time of Instagram Tiktok and in general social media, it's very hard for artists to create real communities and have an impact on people

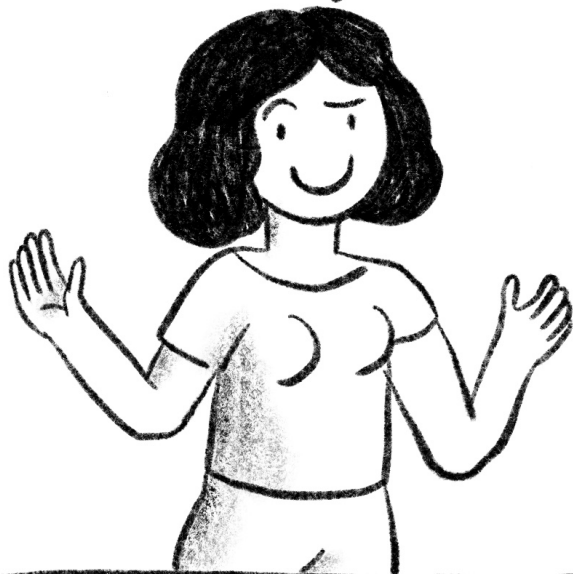

But I want to introduce you to three projects who have managed to do that, despite all the challenges

With their music, they are creating norms and values in order to be more inclusive and emphatic

Did you know, only a small percentage of musicians in Germany are female?

But don't worry, Hanne Kah is one of our heroes who wants to change this reality

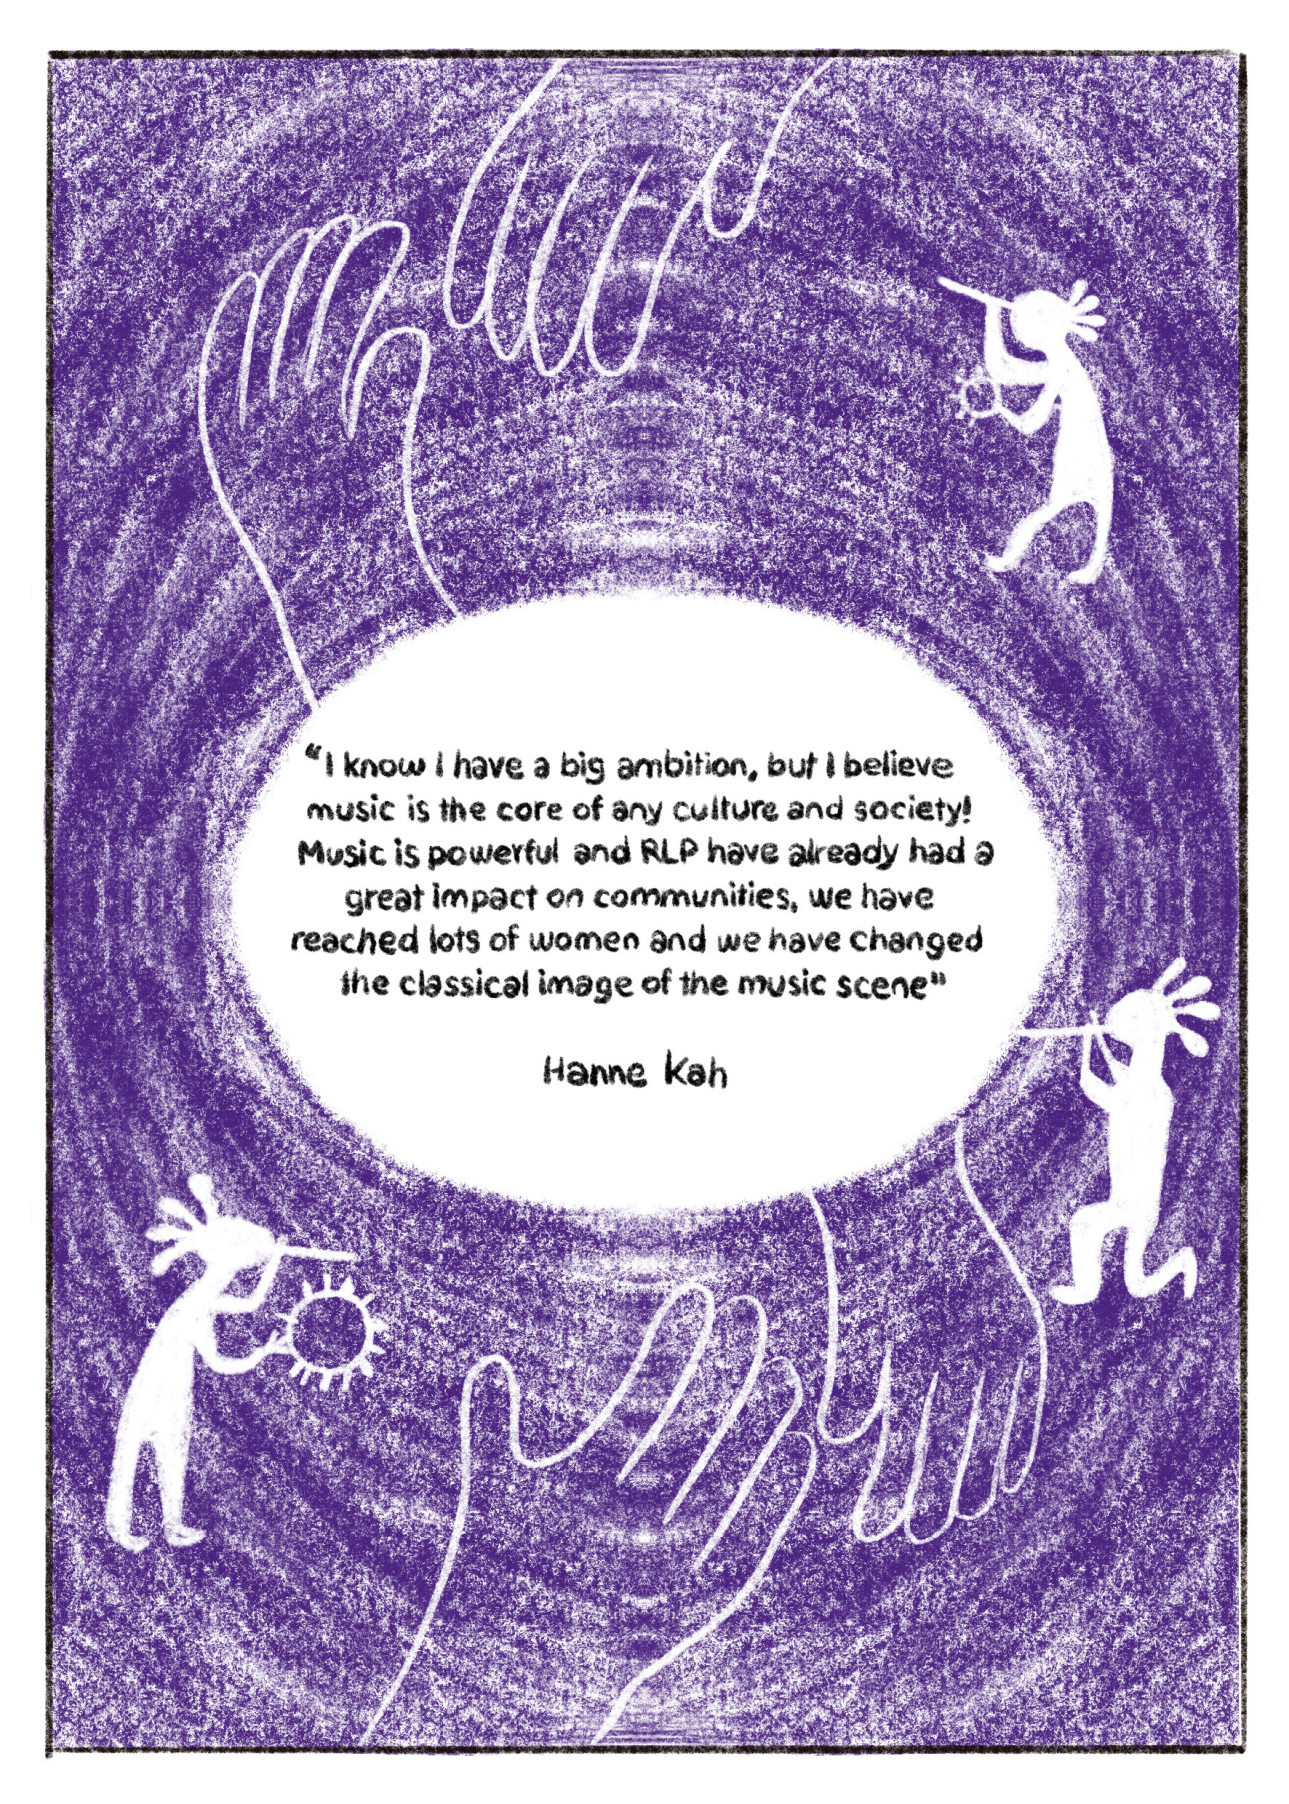

She has her own band and next to that she is co-ordinating an organisation (Pop-rip)...

Where they represent and introduce female musicians to the public

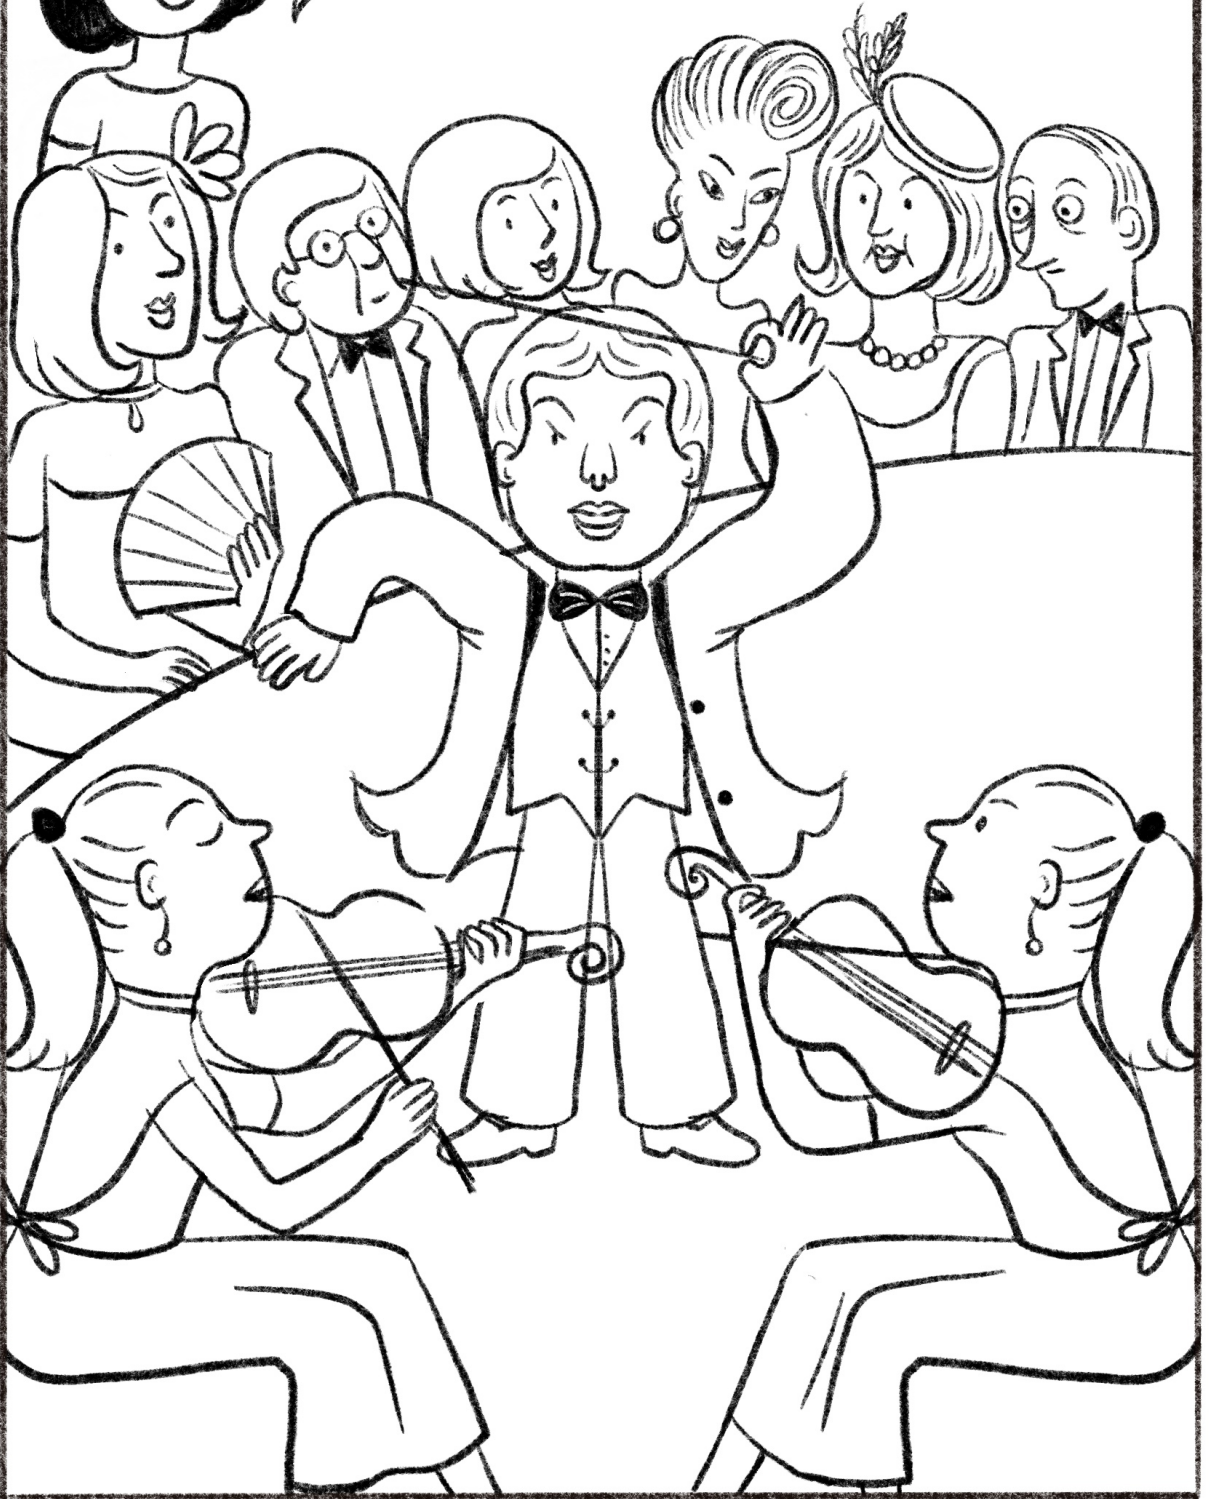

"I know I have a big ambition, but I believe music is the core of any culture and society! Music is powerful and RLP have already had a great impact on communities, we have reached lots of women and we have changed the classical image of the music scene"

Hanne Kah

When it's about classical music, this is the image that comes to my mind. How about you?

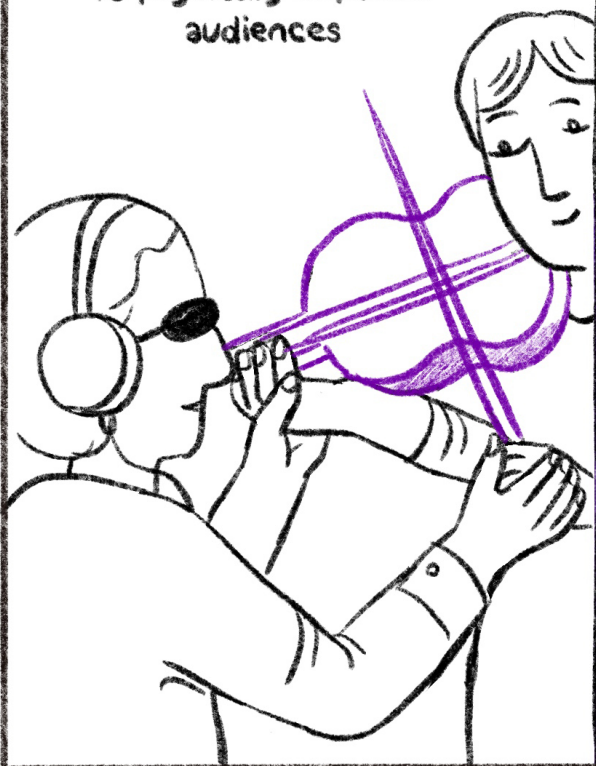

But Kammerakademie is a small orchestra that wants to take classic music out there and make it accessible for everyone

They think of all sorts of audiences, from kids of only 3 years old...

To physically impaired audiences

"What makes us motivated is the happiness of our very diverse audiences! they finally feel included in a form of music that has always been less accessible to them"

Kammerakademie

Enjoy jazz started as a dream and now it's the biggest jazz festival in Germany

Their dream became a reality but they didn't forget their main goals and values

They cooperate with small organisations because making a connection between local and international is important to them

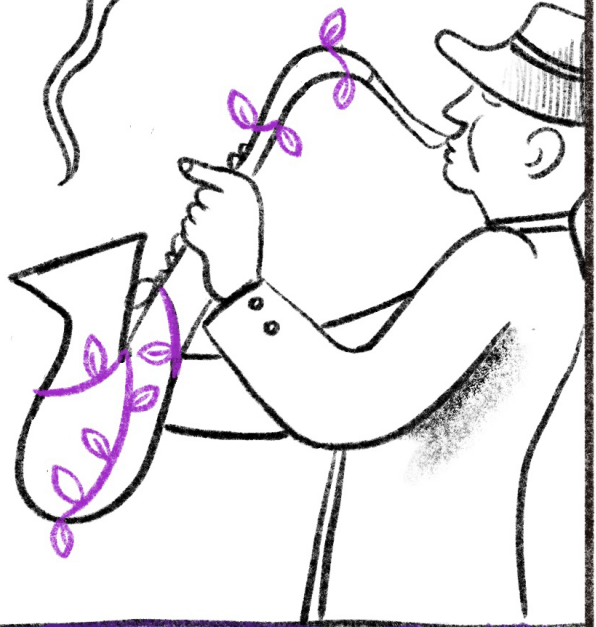

They know there are barriers for some people to go to concerts and they want to change that

We also know there are many great unknown jazz musicians, so we introduce and promote them

We began to work on a green festival concept

"Jazz is a community endeavour and we want to keep it as it is. It was made for the community"

Enjoy jazz

Getting to know these three projects once again made me realise how important music is as a tool for social change and to be honest I wonder how this comic would make a change. I hope these pages have made us reflect better on the power of art on creating communities and having an impact on them
